MEMORANDUM TO: Director of Central Intelligence

*ER-84-6103*FROM: George V. Lauder
Director, Public Affairs OfficeSUBJECT: Invitation to Address the 12th Annual National Collegiate Security Council

1. Action Requested: Accept or decline invitation to give the keynote address to the 12th Annual National Collegiate Security Council (NCSC) on 11, 12, or 13 October.

2. Background: Mr. Matthew Reynolds, Secretary-General of the 12th NCSC, has invited you to give the keynote address on defense and foreign policy at Georgetown University Auditorium on the evening of 11, 12, or 13 October. Several hundred college students from around the country, including students from Princeton and Yale, will attend.

The NCSC is a student-run organization. Once a year, the students gather to simulate a foreign affairs "crisis." The students play the roles of various U.S. national leaders and experience what it is like to manage a fast-breaking diplomatic and defense problem. A conservative group, mostly Republican, they are interested in public service. Previous speakers include: Former Ambassador to the U.N. Donald McHenry; Mr. Peter Crow, Dean of the Georgetown's School of Foreign Service; and Former Secretary General of the U.N. Kurt Waldheim.

Congressman Robert Lagomarsino has also written you urging you to accept this invitation. Matthew Reynolds, whose father is President of American University in Beirut, was an intern for one year for Lagomarsino and that is why the Congressman is interested in this group. Lagomarsino is a conservative Republican from California. Although he is not on any of our oversight committees, he is one of our few friends on the Committee on Foreign Affairs' Subcommittee for Western Hemisphere Affairs. He has supported the Administration's policy concerning Central America.

3. Recommendation: None. With your busy schedule, I do not believe this occasion merits your acceptance, unless you feel it appropriate to do Lagomarsino a favor.

Dear Mr. Casey:

On behalf of the Twelfth Annual National Collegiate Security Council (NCSC XII) sponsored by the Georgetown International Relations Association, I am pleased to invite you to deliver the keynote address on October 11, 1984.

Several hundred college students from all over the United States will be participating as delegates to NCSC XII. In this program, these politically-minded students will have the opportunity to serve as foreign ministers or U.N. Ambassadors for four days. NCSC XII is organized around a crisis management center that directs realistic simulated crises on foreign policy and defense matters that these "world leaders" must address and resolve in accordance with their individual national policies and goals.

While I appreciate your very busy schedule, particularly at this time, I sincerely hope you will be able to deliver this keynote address on defense and foreign policy at Georgetown University. I believe this would prove to be a very good forum to discuss select defense or foreign policy issues for the Administration.

Again, Mr. Casey, we would be greatly honored by your attendance at this major educational event at Georgetown University.

Sincerely,

Matthew A. Reynolds
Secretary-General
NCSC XII
